Read the following text then answer the questions that follow :

Animals live everywhere on Earth, in every terrain and in all climates. The place where an animal lives is called its habitat and most animals can only survive in one or two different habitats. For example, whales are sea creature and could not live in fresh water, lizards live in hot climates and would die if they were moved to the Arctic. Some animals migrate between two habitats at different times of the year. In this article, you will find out about two animals which can live in different habitats, and one which has adapted to a particular environment.

There are seventeen different species of penguins, including the famous Emperor penguins and the common Chinstrap penguins. All of these live in the southern hemisphere many on Antarctica around the South Pole. But some live in warmer places, for example on the coasts of South America, Africa, Australia, and the Galapagos Islands. Many of the 13 million Chinstrap penguins live on large icebergs in the open ocean.

There are two different species of camel, the one- humped Arabian camel, and the two-humped Bactrian camel. They live in deserts throughout the world, including in Jordan, and have even been introduced in Australia! Camels have specially adapted to the desert environment and have wide feet to help them walk in the sand. They can remain for days without water, even in the hottest weather, and can drink 130 liters of water at a time.

Kangaroos and their close relatives, wallabies, are only found naturally in Australia and Papua New Guinea. Like wombats and koala bears, kangaroos are marsupials, which means that when young are born they are carried by their mothers in a pouch. There are forty- five species of kangaroos and wallabies and they live in every kind of habitat, from open plains to forests and rocky deserts. Tree kangaroos live in remote and mountainous forest regions and have adapted to life in trees. Unlike other kangaroos, they cannot move very fast on the ground.
